Karito Kids Review & GIVEAWAY!

KARITO Kids

I was contacted by Lisa from Karito Kids, a super fun interactive program for children that shows them how to make the world that we live in a better place. She wanted to know if I was interested in doing a review about their products. So I clicked over to the website and looked around for a while - by the time I was done checking it out I definitely knew I wanted to share Karito Kids with my readers! I was so impressed by the overall motive behind Karito Kids. It's something that every child should learn about.

Every Purchase Helps Another Child

Like all Karito Kids products, three percent of the retail price helps another child—and purchasers decide how! Every item comes with a special code allowing them to log on to karitokids.com, play great games, earn extra World Change™ and direct their gift to one of four causes: school, home, health or food.

There are six adorable dolls to choose from: Gia from Italy, Ling from China, Luke from Kenya, Piper from Australia, Pita from Mexico and Zoe from the US. My kids are part Italian and Greek so we chose Gia - the cutest little Italian doll ever! She arrived standing 21" tall in a huge box, sporting a very cool and chic outfit. She is a posable doll with hair long enough to be styled and brushed, which my daughter loves doing! Gia also came with a book "Florence Fiocco" that both my kids enjoyed reading. Inside the box is a passport with Gia's info and an activation code used to access KaritoKids.com interactive website. After we registered it brought us to the first screen. Because we had a Karito Kids Doll we automatically received one point to be used toward our choice charity that Karito Kids helps out. My kids chose the category "Hunger" and donated their token. This is what it said after "Next time you eat, know that you helped a child in China to eat too!" Karito Kids has helped purchase over 4,500 chickens and counting! That's a lot of eggs! My kids then proceeded to play all the games to earn passport stamps and points. My daughter really enjoyed playing the Dress Up Game and my son had a blast playing Hidden Quest. The more
